

Consistent vibrational echoing from the environment, facilitates a topographic mechanism which can be studied and interpreted. Along with the sonic waves pulsating through space at all times, electromagnetic packets also transverse the landscape. In addition to these invisible, yet present, forces, kinetic energy, heat, gravity are all interacting to form complex systems of chaotic mechanics. Energy is continuously, economically, exchanging between forces. Eternally deforming and reforming, these forces coerce change through their existence. Uncompromising and relentless. It is then possible to consciously involve ourselves in this echo, for we are already part of it. Is it possible though to contribute and enable these forces to compel the body into patterns of unfound, unheard, unseen? When a body of rock is placed under stress, the individual particles which make up that body are displaced to new positions, new trajectories, new maps are made. a vibrational document, a comprehension of this reality.